LEVEL 2

MODULE 4.1: PROCUREMENT

 Assess status and explore use of tools and methodologies

• Has the approached used to date been effective?

- It is important to properly and coherently review the current status of the Green Public Procurement (GPP) process as a starting point, when exploring how you can improve practices.
  - Identify in all municipal departments how procurement is addressed, if GPP procurement criteria are being used, and correctly applied.
  - Explore if political leaders and staff understand why GPP is important and what is possible? For example, to understanding the huge potential for action consider that "Public authorities in Europe spend €1.5 trillion a year on goods and services equivalent to 16% of EU Gross Domestic Product (GDP). From constructing energy efficient public buildings to buying low emission vehicles, from buying organic or Fair Trade food to installing water-saving toilets public procurement can have a huge impact in driving the market towards sustainability" (source: Procura+ Manual, 2nd edition).
- A major barrier making GPP successful is that often departments within a local government do not work close enough together while aiming to implement GPP. Therefore, GPP comes along with an analysis of the current situation, processes and procedures asking key questions such as "who is supporting day-to-day procurers setting the right environmental criteria?", "who provides legal support for GPP?" and "how can the central procurement unit be strengthened?".
